

dillondoyle

For Immediate Release

From: Dillon Doyle
September 23, 2009

CODE: PUB-1 (<http://dillondoyle.com/codes/>)

DU BIKE DAY

On this day, Thursday September 24th, DU students have once again developed a new frontier where the convergence of student engagement and sustainable solutions help solve the problems of our day.

DU students truly are pioneering a greener future.

The DU Bike Library allows DU students to borrow a bike for free, giving students a simple and easy to use alternative to transportation by car. There are twenty bikes on campus: ten are stationed at Centennial Halls and ten are stationed at the Nelson/Nagel bike rack. This unique system will be integrated with the greater Denver Bike Sharing initiative scheduled to launch on Earth Day 2010. Eventually the bikes will be part of a kiosk system where students and Denverites can take advantage of over 150 stations and 258 miles of bike paths throughout the city of Denver.

With over 300 days of sunshine, Colorado and the University of Denver are great locations for such an innovative program.

As with all tough issues, global climate change doesn't have an easy and obvious solution. That is why students at DU work everyday to reduce their impact and to make a difference by enabling easy-to-use and sustainable alternatives to become more accessible to the greater community.

By pioneering solutions for the problems we face, students at the University of Denver have once again altered the [bike] path of history.